

The Creation of Sound: Mondomusica New York 2014 introduces a seminar discussing the collaboration between a violinist and a luthier

Mondomusica New York will be held at 82Mercer in Manhattan from April 10-12, 2014

Mondomusica New York, the finest American exhibition for violin and string-instrument making, is much more than a trade show. Mondomusica New York is dedicated to sharing the latest issues and trends that are happening in the music community at present, targeting performers, string-instrument makers, members of the music industry, as well as music enthusiasts. The development of this year's seminars and events will include relevant topics concerning the modern day musician, one discussion being on the customization of an instrument. One of the major differences between purchasing a preexisting instrument and a customized one is that the buyer has the ability to set forth their expectations for what they would desire from the instrument itself. Musicians establish a dialogue with the maker, ultimately granting them the opportunity to customize their specific needs and discover what is really appropriate. Sam Zygmuntowicz, a guest speaker at Mondomusica New York, discusses the process and importance of communication between the musician and instrument maker. Zygmuntowicz states, "Part of the process is to understand the playing style of the musician and it is also very important for the musician to express what they are using now, what their goals are, and what their frustrations are and what there are wishes are. Also for the maker to be very receptive to the wishes of the musician." At Mondomusica New York he will discuss in further detail about this interesting process of communicating the needs of the violinists, in order to produce an instrument that best suits the artist. Establishing a positive outcome for the creation of sounds from a new instrument is a topic that will be discussed as part of a series of seminars and events at Mondomusica New York 2014.
